

CLAIM:

Social networking can make family relationships complicated.

A

Supporting Evidence

"Family living abroad can be kept abreast of the latest happenings in your world as quickly as those living next door."

B

Supporting Evidence

"The point is that by all of us sharing our experiences, both good and bad, on social networking sites, we're able to empathize with each other."

C

Supporting Evidence

"I suspect future generations will be unable to distinguish between meaningful relationships and casual acquaintances."

(Reference: Source #3 )

(Reference: Source #3 )

(Reference: Source #2 )

D

Supporting Evidence

"Youngsters especially could become convinced that they are more important than anyone else, and that what they have to say should be read and responded to by a wider audience."

E

Supporting Evidence

"The very concept of privacy seems to be inexorably eroding"

F

Supporting Evidence

"It's entirely possible to have hundreds of friends on Facebook. They may not be friends you know on a personal level and spend time with in the real world on a weekly basis. But they're friends nevertheless."

(Reference: Source #2 )

(Reference: Source #2 )

(Reference: Source #2 )